Michael Hutter (Dormagen, 26/12/1963) is a German painter, graphic artist and writer.

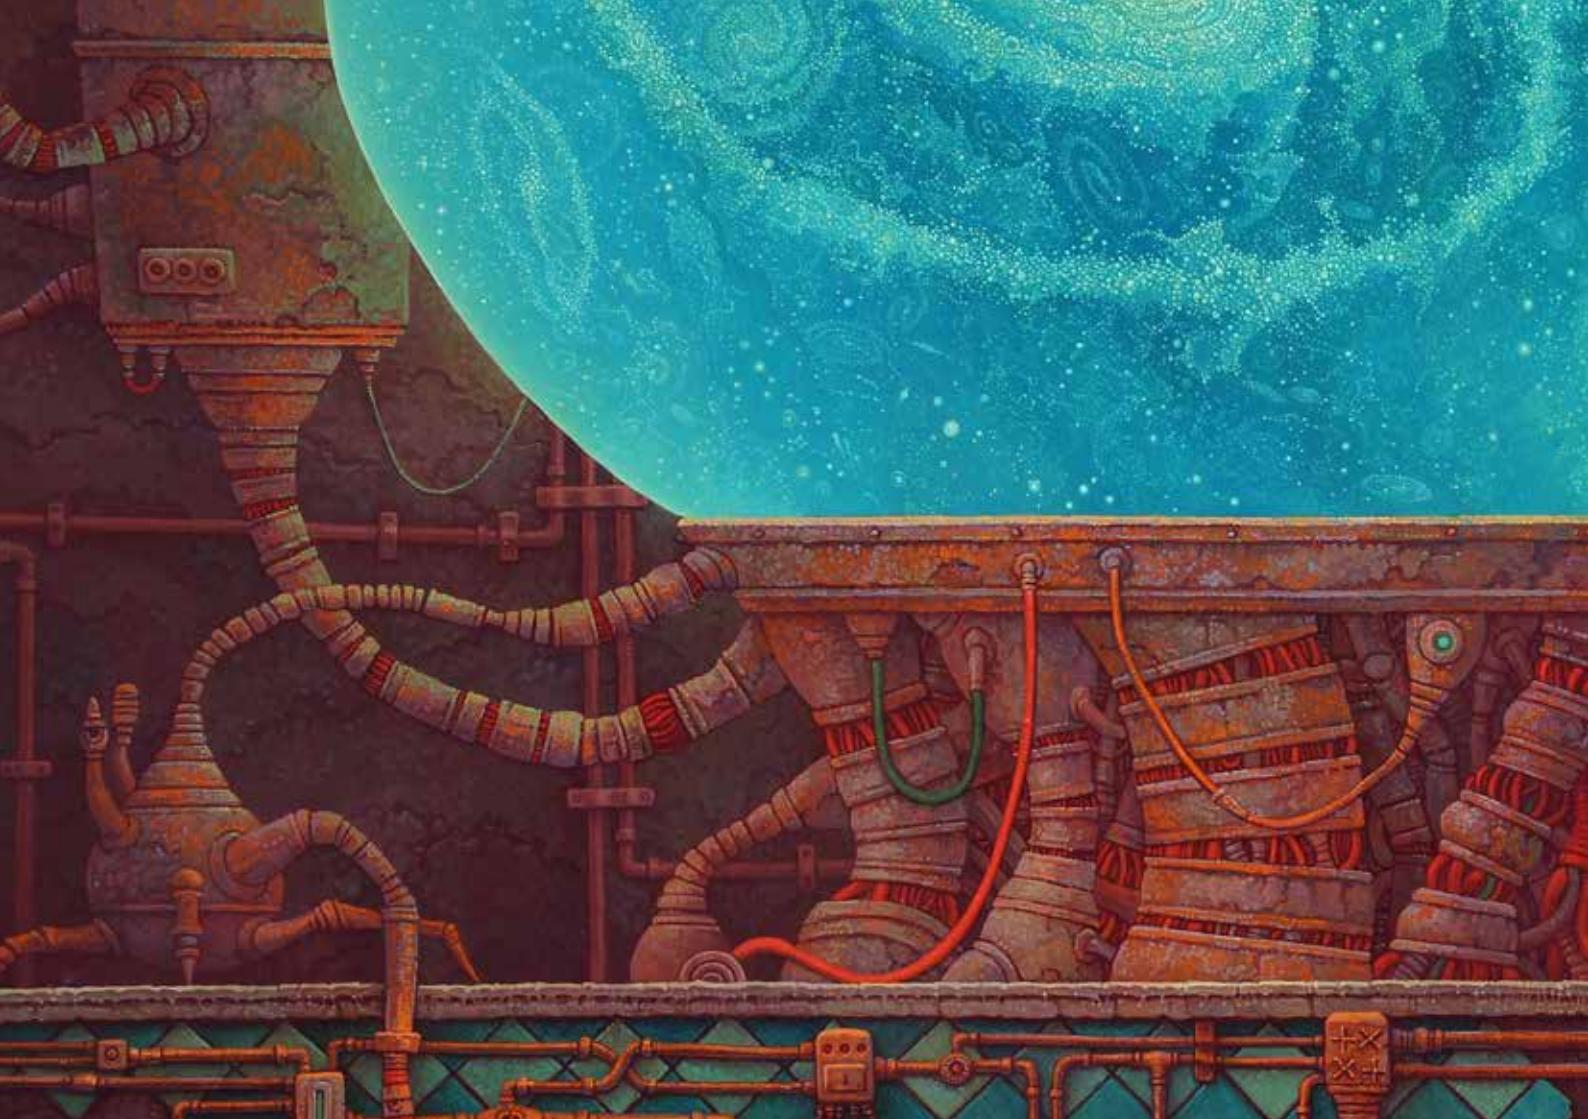

From 1983 to 1986 he studied free painting in the class of Prof. Karl Marx at the Cologne University of Applied Sciences. Since then he had a lively exhibition activity in Germany and abroad and on www.kunstkrake.de

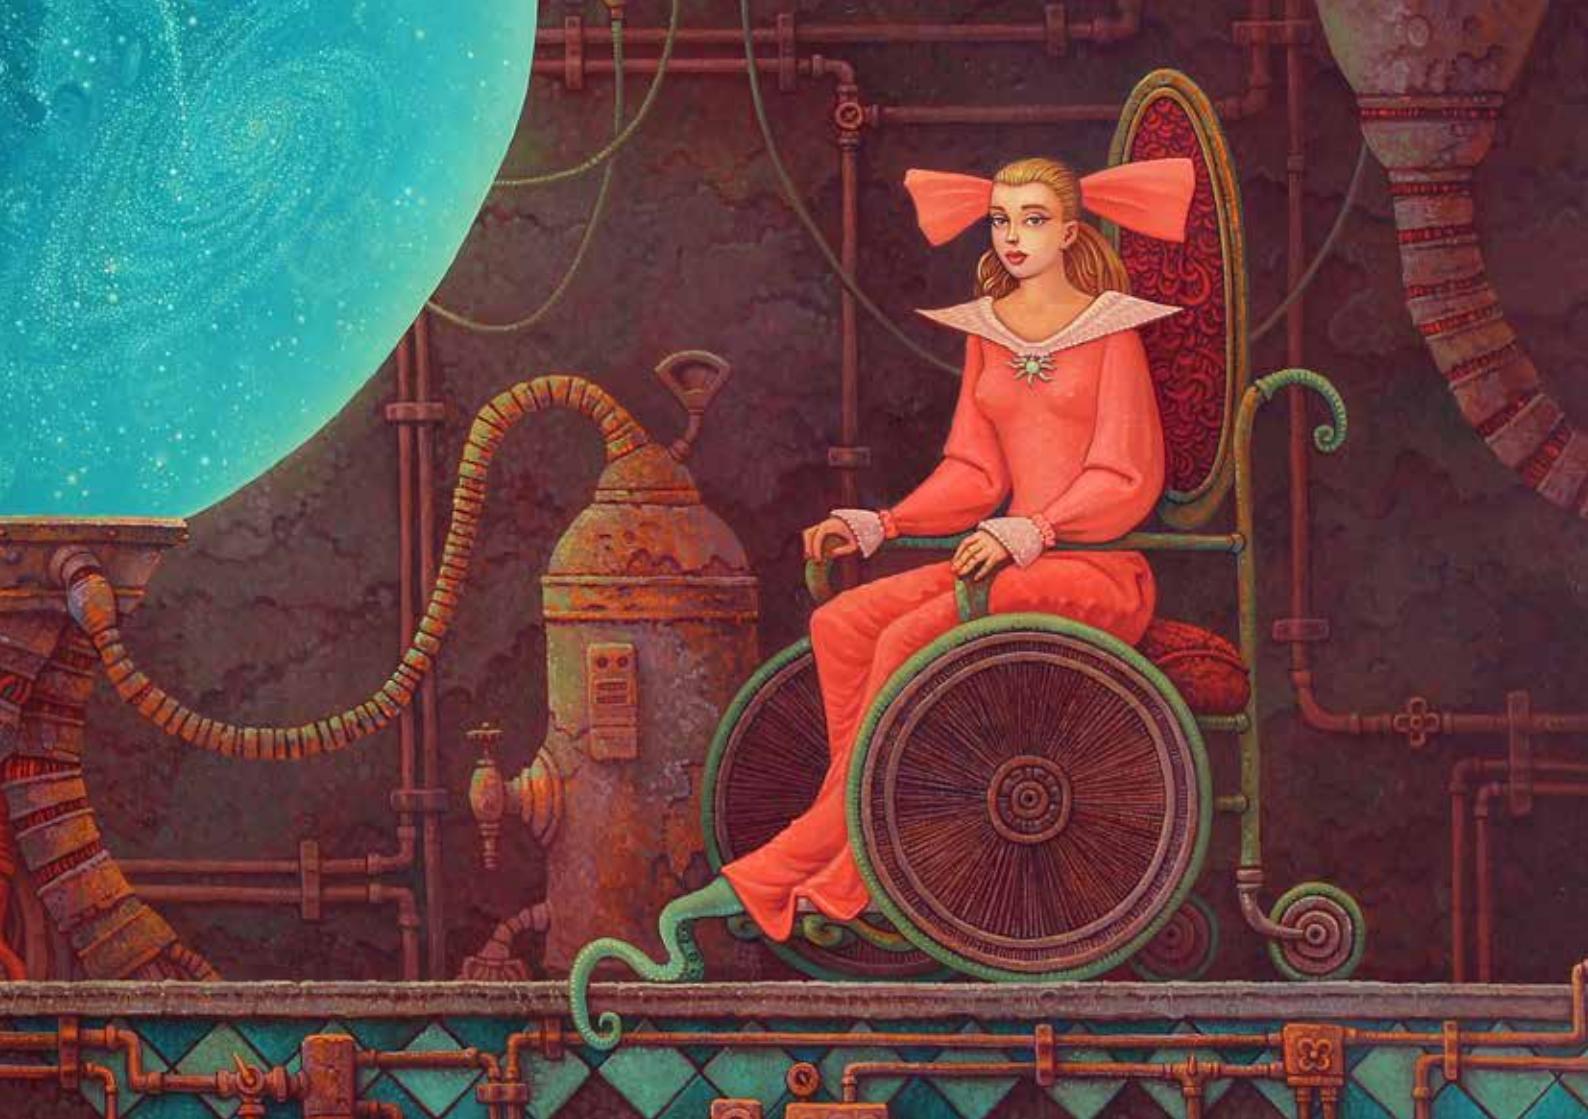

In his dark, intricately detailed works, he focuses on eroticism, religion and cosmic horror.

In the year 2002, his self-illustrated story cycle Melchior Grün; Fuenf Moritaten was published by Luftschiff Verlag. His new story cycle, The Kranzedan Tales, is in course of publication by Centipede Press.

"To evoke these pictures I developed some techniques, which are my way to deal with literature, art, music, philosophy, science, religion and pseudo-science afar from mainstream culture. I don't care for reality or the probability that something is true, only for its potential to stimulate my imagination. In my opinion truth is somehow an illusion anyway. I mix that with my obsession, passions, desires and fears and squeeze what happens in the abyss of my personality back to the surface."
